Wizards of Ahhhs

The goal for this master bath, undertaken by Donald E. Giambastiani and Beth Bourque when they were with the Wazertown, Massachusetts, firm of Solomon+Bauer+Giambastiani Architects, was a spa-like amenity. Simplicity reigns in the expansive space; the palette is a peaceful blend of soft, earthy hues, and only a handful of materials are used. The soaring ceiling is outfitted with cedar, while cabinetry is crafted of quarter-sawn oak. A scraped-marble tile the homeowner fell in love with went up on the walls, complemented with slabs and tiles of Hauteville limestone for the floor, vanity counter, and tub deck. No frame or complicated hardware mars the clean look of the shower, where the design pros opted for glass panels held with unobtrusive clips. Faucet and light fixtures in brushed stainless steel and satin nickel complete the look.
